I joined The Collett School as Headteacher in September 2011 and became a Governor at the same time.

At The Collett School, I continue to be a teacher of art and over the years have sought to promote the value of young people's art work as an important aspect of childhood development, personal expression and another language in which to comment on our world.

In working with children, whether from highly affluent or deprived backgrounds, my passion for making a difference has always remained central to the needs of the child. My Masters degree at The University of Cambridge developed my professional interests in value and worth, areas I am now pursuing with a doctorate to further enhance our collective leadership of The Collett School.

I believe in The Collett School and know together, we have made immense improvements, whilst also being very clear about the future needs for the school. That said, ideas change and evolve and it is great to work with fantastic professionals in school and, so many experts on our pupils – their families – in making the school as good as it possibly can be.
